CT head and cervical spine without contrast

Clinical Indication: Head injury, aggressive behavior, alcohol use, laceration to right side of face.

Comparison: None.

Technique: The study was acquired in a helical fashion with multiplanar thin section reconstructions.

The patient was imaged less than 24 hours after presentation to the hospital.

Findings:

Study slightly limited by motion. No evidence of parenchymal or extra-axial hemorrhage. No evidence of acute infarction in a vascular distribution. Symmetric high density along the venous sinuses is most likely related to hemoconcentration. No evidence of mass, midline shift, or brain herniation. Lateral ventricles are symmetric and midline. There is no evidence of depressed skull fracture or aggressive bony lesion. The mastoid air cells and visualized paranasal sinuses are clear. The orbital structures appear symmetric and normal. Linear high density in the right preseptal space, nonspecific, may represent foreign body. Correlate clinically.

No acute cervical spine fracture, disc disruption or facet dislocation. Degenerative change as demonstrated by disc osteophyte complex at the level of C3-C4 and C4-C5. Straightening of the cervical spine may be positional or related to muscle spasm. The prevertebral soft tissues appear unremarkable. Biapical scarring. Prominent neck lymph nodes, nonspecific, probably reactive. Small 6 mm lucency in the right aspect of the C3 vertebral body, nonspecific, and probably an intraosseous hemangioma.

IMPRESSION:

No evidence of acute intracranial hemorrhage, edema, or midline shift. Linear high density in the slightly lateral right preseptal space, nonspecific, may represent foreign body.

No evidence of acute cervical spine fracture, subluxation, or facet dislocation.
